Report of Superintendent of Schools

To the School Boards of Northfield Town and Union Districts:

I submit herein my first annual report as superintendent of schools, it being the third in the series of such reports.

During the half-year in which I have been in the service of the supervisory district I have devoted myself to a study of the teaching in the schools, and have given such assistance as I was able, to increase its efficiency. This task, of inspection and suggestion, has been altogether a pleasant one, for I have found teachers more than ready to receive criticism, and anxious to act at once upon any suggestion looking toward better methods. The program of studies issued by the state department is used as a guide in all the schools of the supervisory district. I have found that, in working for increased efficiency of teaching, it is best to concentrate on one thing at a time, bringing to bear all possible resources of help for this subject. During the half-year, special attention has been given to reading.

Learning to read is, for the beginner, a difficult and complex process. He is confronted with a mass of symbols, representing words, having no possible relation to the things for which they stand. He must learn to think the word when he sees the symbol, and to grasp the idea represented by the word, as well as to follow the thought expressed by a succession of words. In addition to this he is expected to interpret these symbols to a hearer by reading aloud. When asked to do all this at once he inevitably fails, and becomes absorbed in the process of recognizing and pronouncing words, repeating these without thought and without expression. The skillful teacher breaks up this difficult process, making the drill upon symbols and sounds an exercise by itself, allowing the child time to master the thought, and finally asking him to express vocally the thought he has gained. Much use has been made of dramatizing, especially in the lower grades, as an aid to expression, and the aim has been to have many times as much read silently as vocally. The attempt has been made to lead the children, almost from the first, to think of reading as something other than a required school exercise, to lead them on to the discovery that the book is the gateway into a new and wonderful world. It has proved possible to interest the children in reading, even as early as the second grade, so that in a free period, when they are permitted to do just what they please, the entire class will call for their favorite books, to be read by themselves. We have endeavored to develop a taste for the best in literature, and the reading of older pupils has been guided by advice from the teacher, and by lists, posted in the class room, of books available in the public library. This special study of reading had been forwarded by the purchase of a half-dozen of the best treatises on reading for the teachers' library in the Union school, and by private purchases of books by teachers.

In arithmetic we have aimed at greater care, accuracy, and intelligence. Long, involved examples, and unusual topics have been discouraged, and greater attention has been paid to wide awake oral work, and thorough drill upon the fundamental operations.

The task of acquiring a business method of penmanship, already undertaken in the schools, has been continued by the adoption of the manuals of the A. N. Palmer Company, an adoption which gives us the advantage of correspondence instruction for teachers, and, for those willing to incur a slight expense, for pupils as well.

A new form of pupil's report blank has been adopted in all the schools of the supervisory district. The attempt to report the work of children in per cents, or in letters equivalent to per cents has been abandoned, and, instead, a brief letter is sent from teacher to parent, containing such information as would be given in a friendly conversation. The plan does away with the petty jealousies always created by the publishing of per cents, and relieves the teacher from the distraction incident to a constant effort to mark with strict justice. At the same time it is more enlightening to parents as to the progress of their children.

NORTHFIELD TOWN DISTRICT

Of the eight school houses in the district, four were in use during the fall term. The total registration of pupils is very small, amounting at present to only forty. The total membership of the Hodgdon school is but seven, and it would be much more economical to pay tuition in Franklin. The Franklin classrooms have been so crowded, however, that tuition pupils could not be accepted.

A notable advance has been made in the length of the school year, a winter term having been included for the first time. Attendance has been good. At the close of the winter term the Bean Hill and Center schools will have had twenty-five weeks of schooling since August, the Hodgdon twenty-three and the Oak Hill fourteen.

The schools have labored under some handicaps—the small size being one of these. Children miss in these schools, the stimulus which comes from larger numbers. The teachers have been untrained, and nearly all teaching their first term of school. They have been wide awake and industrious, however, and some excellent work has been done.

UNION SCHOOL DISTRICT

Nearly every room has been filled to its full capacity, and extra seats have been added in some. Any further increase will prove embarrassing, and will make the best work difficult. Excellent work has been done during the half-year. The teachers are, without exception, alert, hard working, and progressive, and several possess conspicuous ability. Beside the emphasis upon studies already noted, in which good progress has been made; some interesting efforts have been made in several classes, to supplement the sedentary, bookish, abstract tasks which fill our school days, with work which is more active, and in close touch with reality. In the fifth grade the period assigned to physiology has been spent in a drill upon action in emergencies. No books are used, except a single manual in the hands of the teacher. The aim is to train to action, so that it will be instinctive and immediate. It is needless to say that the children have entered into this study with enthusiasm. In the sixth and seventh grades a beginning has been made in the teaching of sewing and wood-working. The work has been developed thus far by the voluntary action of the teachers and pupils, a single period of school time each week being given to it, and materials and tools being furnished by pupils.

Several important results follow such work. First, an immediate and eager interest. And since a five-hour school day does not allow adequate time, a demand for time after school, and for directions for home work. This new interest and enthusiasm are often carried over into other studies. Many pupils who are not bookish by nature find themselves in work of this sort. A dull pupil wins distinction for the first time, and henceforth holds a new estimate of his own powers and possibilities. This hand work, too, forms a useful means of correlation, and becomes the natural starting point for work in arithmetic, drawing, language, etc.

The employment of an assistant teacher for the building has proved a wise move. Her time is divided between the first grade, too large to be adequately taught by the regular teacher, and groups of children from the classes above the first, who for one reason or another need special help in certain branches. Many years in the aggregate will be saved to pupils by this help, promotions being possible which would otherwise be impossible.

The endeavor has been made to safeguard the health of pupils in every possible way. Great attention is paid to ventilation, and the air is generally good. The common drinking cup has been abolished, and bubbling fountains installed. Dust is kept down by the use of floor oil, and disinfectants are in constant use in the basements. Teachers have been alert for signs of contagious disease, and in case of doubt have availed themselves of the rule of the Board allowing an immediate appeal to a physician.

I want to endorse the proposition made by a member of the Board, that the district extend its activities by opening an evening school for the benefit of those of mature years who wish to make good their deficiencies in the common English branches. There should be a considerable number who would prize such an opportunity, and it is certainly a part of the duty of the public schools to assist in making intelligent citizens.

UNION OF DISTRICTS

The question of the organization of education in the two towns is one which deserves the most careful attention from the citizens of Tilton and Northfield. It is plain that there are three courses open. The districts may remain as they are. In that case the Union district will probable be unable to care longer for tuition pupils from the town districts. The natural increase will make it physically impossible to accommodate any outside its own borders. It is practically certain, too, that all the districts will lose, not only the state aid for qualified teachers and for average attendance of pupils, as heretofore, but also the rebate for high school tuition, amounting last year, for the three districts, to $1,400. This loss can be averted only by a reorganization of the districts, or by special legislation.

A second alternative is the dissolution of the Union district, which may be brought about by a majority vote of the qualified voters present and voting at a legal district meeting. This action would leave the town districts identical in extent with the towns themselves, and would involve the assumption of the entire cost of the Union building by the town of Northfield, and the erection of a similar building by the town of Tilton. The towns would then be in a position to receive whatever state aid was due them.

The third possibility is the union of the three districts in one, by the addition of the town districts to the union. Special legislation would be necessary to effect this union, and to provide that the Union district should receive the amount of state aid properly coming to the two towns. This larger union would involve an increase of school accommodations in the village, for, while such a union might not mean that the rural schools would be abolished it would mean that every child within the limits of the two towns would have the advantages of the graded school as soon as accommodations could be provided for those who wished to attend.

It is for the citizens of the two towns to decide under what method of organization the best results will be obtained. It is to be hoped that the debate will be kept upon a high plane, and that the chief consideration will be the highest good of the children. My own opinion is that ultimately a much more satisfactory system of schools will be evolved by the union of the three districts. Certainly if the three were now one nobody would propose to set off a large territory containing forty pupils, and another containing seventy-five, into separate school districts, and maintain all the organization of school districts, with officers and meetings, for these few pupils. It is plain that such a union would mean an increased rate of taxation for school purposes for the town districts. On the other hand the children of these districts would have before them greater educational advantages. There would be some economies, too, in such a union. Paid town district offices would no longer be maintained, no tuition would be raised for those wishing to attend the graded school, and the state aid available would diminish the amount to be raised by taxation.

In conclusion, allow me to acknowledge the uniform courtesy and consideration which have been shown me by all, both in the school department and in the community at large.

Respectfully submitted,

CHARLES A. BRECK,

Superintendent.
